- (A) List of Changes in Design Assignments for DEs.
- (B) List of Changes in Design Assignments for DDs.

1. Enclosure (A) of reference (a) included a projected basic schedule for application of camouflage measures to many of the vessels of the Pacific Fleet.
2. After the design program was well under way, it became apparent to the Bureau that the destroyer program in particular could be greatly expedited if a few reassignments of designs were made. This procedure appeared justified in order to reduce the number of designs which in some cases, particularly for the older classes of destroyers, covered only a few vessels. For destroyers of the 445 and 692 Classes, special plans for all of the sixteen designs originally selected have been prepared or are in preparation, and changes in assignment are almost entirely for older construction. A few changes in design assignments were made solely because a certain design was immediately available in a yard and the vessel would otherwise have left without camouflage painting.
3. To clarify the records, design assignments differing from those outlined in the schedule of reference (a) are forwarded as enclosures (A) and (B).
4. It was apparent from the partial schedule set up by the fleet that a certain amount of variety and also a certain amount of repetition was regarded as good camouflage practice. The Bureau has adhered to this policy and Design 3D has already been adapted for twelve different types of vessels. In many cases adaptation to a vessel of different construction has necessitated drastic changes in design. This became particularly apparent in modifying the original 16 designs to the carriers and escort carriers. The designs lost so much of their original character that in most cases it was thought best to give the modified design a new number or to prepare an entirely new design.

5. In the case of the new designs the Bureau has continued the policy of causing confusion of identification by distributing adaptations of design to different types and classes, thus Design 11a, originally prepared for a carrier of the CV-9 Class, has also been issued for escort carriers and AEs, and further distribution is contemplated.
